

Allison Bramwell has a PhD in Political Science from the University of Toronto with a specialization in Canadian Public Policy, where her doctoral research focused on workforce development and urban governance in three Ontario cities. She is currently a Postdoctoral Research Fellow with the Program on Globalization and Regional Innovation Systems (PROGRIS) at the Munk School of Global Affairs where she is part of a research team investigating the social dynamics that shape economic performance in Canadian city-regions. She also teaches an undergraduate course in Urban Politics at the University of Toronto Mississauga. Allison has given many domestic and international presentations and published studies in various policy areas such as workforce development, the role of post-secondary institutions in regional economic development, and the interaction effect of innovation, creativity, and economic performance in Canadian cities. Recent work includes “Ontario Colleges in the Creative Age: Bohemians, Bioinformatics, and the Built Environment”, for the Martin Prosperity Institute’s Report on Ontario in the Creative Age commissioned by the Province of Ontario, and contributions to the Conference Board of Canada’s recent publication, 21st Century Cities in Canada: The Geography of Innovation. She is currently working on commissioned research for the Mowat Centre for Policy Innovation’s Employment Insurance Task Force, a SSHRC funded review of Canada’s ICT sector, and empirical studies of urban governance dynamics in Toronto and Hamilton. She can be reached at allison.bramwell@utoronto.ca.